ADDITIONAL RISK DISCLOSURE
For Customers with Annual Income or Net Worth of Less than US $25,000

Trading futures or exchange-traded options or any other margined financial instrument is a highly risky form of investing. A margin account can be traded using significant leverage, which means that all funds may be lost if positions held in the account have a relatively small change in value. Given the possibility of losing your entire investment, speculation in the futures or exchange-traded options markets should only be conducted with funds you consider risk capital, which if lost, will not significantly affect you or your family's financial well-being. If you have engaged in only conservative forms of investments in the past, you should consider whether futures or exchange-traded options trading is suitable for you before pursuing an investment of this nature. You could sustain a total loss of all funds you deposit with your dealer as margin when you trade futures or exchange-traded options contracts should the market move against your positions. When buying exchange-traded options, you should also realize that you could lose the entire option premium should the option expire worthless.

If you have decided to trade in futures or exchange-traded options contracts, you acknowledge that the funds you have committed are purely risk capital and that loss of your investment will not jeopardize your style of living or detract from your future retirement needs. Additionally, you acknowledge that you fully understand the nature and risks of futures or exchange-traded options contracts, that the risk of loss is high, and that you accept full responsibility for your decision to trade in the futures and exchange-traded options markets. GFT Futures will accept your account in reliance upon your acknowledgment of this notification.
